This teensy stealth fly swatter affixes to your forefinger so you can flick any pests away. The patent for this device accuses traditional fly swatters of being cumbersome and unsanitary, but we are confused about how we are supposed to be able to hit a tiny fly with a tiny swatter.

2

Apparently, a peel just isn't protective enough for some banana lovers. This individual banana holder promises to ward off browning, smelliness, and bruising. The Banana Protective Device just comes off as incredibly paranoid, though.

3

Do you chew your pen or your pencil? No more need to feel guilty! Just get these Din-Ink pen lids which are made from non-toxic food approved materials and start chewing. Not to mention that you will have your own set of flatware everywhere you go.

Anti-theft lunch bags may seem ridiculous, but they could keep your lunch away from prying hands. These $4 bags disguise your sandwich or snack with tinted green patches in the plastic that make it look like mold is growing on both sides. While most seem to be happy with their new sandwich bags, a reviewer points out that the only con would be if someone were cleaning out the fridge and threw away your sandwich or snack without looking closely.

4

For the incredibly paranoid, this life expectancy watch is supposed to predict the moment that you will die. The watch supposedly takes into account the wearer's marital status, family history, exercise habits, diet, and other factors to come up with a time of death.

5

Even with an umbrella over your head on an especially rainy and windy day, you often end up getting drenched. In Japan, a full body umbrella guarantees a waterproof experience during a downpour. The practical invention has extra material to fill gaps and keep rain out. Held by a handle in the center, the umbrellas surround the person to keep him or her dry. But how on earth does this full body umbrella open and close...?
