EXERCISE 1

Rearrange parts of the article below by numbering the boxes given from 1 to 6.

The rate of gangsterism in schools is getting worse from year to year. Teachers and parents should work together to curb this problem.

The police department can be invited to give a special talk on this issue. Such motivational talks should be organised to give advice to students. Besides that, those who are involved in this unhealthy activity should be punished by making them do community work. This kind of punishment can help to inculcate good moral values in them.

Apart from that, counselling sessions must be held to advise students who are already involved in gangsterism. School counsellors can also plan out activities like team building and camping for them. Perhaps by having such sessions and activities, it will help these students to realise their misdeeds and motivate them to be better students.

With the above preventive measures, let us hope that gangsterism in schools can be reduced so that we can study and live in a safe environment.
