Houses have changed in [1] many / a lot of / much ways over the past 50 years. People used to socialize in the living room, eat in the dining room and cook in the kitchen. Now, people have [2] few / little / a little interest in a separate room for eating. They want [3] plenty of / many / too much space to socialize, so they often combine the kitchen and living room. There also need to be [4] too many / too / enough bathrooms for everyone – rather than just one, as in the past. One house builder said, 'You can't have [5] too many / enough / any bathrooms. We're all far [6] too much / too many / too busy to wait for other people to have a shower!' But what about outside? Has there been [7] much / many / a lot of change here? Again, some people say they've got [8] none / not any / no time to look after a garden, so they prefer to have a patio with perhaps [9] a few / few / a little plants in pots. Or they use their front gardens for their cars. In some cities, there [10] aren't any / are no / are none front gardens left any more.
