Thula Thula is a private wildlife reserve and hotel. Thula Thula means 'peace' in Zulu, the language of a famous South African tribe. Thula Thula is in Kwazulu Natal province in South Africa. This is where the Zulu tribe comes from.

The area is home to hundreds of species of animals, including rhinoceros, leopards, crocodiles and giraffes. In 1999, the owner of Thula Thula, Lawrence Anthony, rescued a herd of seven elephants and brought them to his wildlife reserve. Since then, the family has grown to 25 elephants!The story of his experiences with the elephants is the subject of his book, The Elephant Whisperer. The owners of Thula Thula adopted Thabo, a baby rhino, in 2009 when he was just a few days old. He now lives on the wildlife reserve.

Guests stay in luxury tents with beds and showers. There are some outdoor showers too if you don't mind monkeys watching you from the trees! A lot of guests say the food is the best thing at Thula Thula. Don't forget to try a traditional African 'braai' (barbecue).

Local guides, who have a lot of knowledge about the area, take groups of guests on safaris. You can also go on organized walks and learn about unusual plants that only grow in South Africa.

Thula Thula is open all year. In winter from April to August, the temperature is usually warm in the day and cool at night. In summer from September to March, the days are hot and the nights are warm.
