Match the technique in the left column being used to the appropriate example in the right column.

	A list can make something seem as if it dragging on and reflect someone's annoyance.
	By using a colon, the word that follows it is emphasised, which shows how annoyed the person is.
	The use of exclamation marks makes someone sound annoyed.
	A one word sentence is blunt and to the point.
	By repeating the same word several times the person seems annoyed.

Match the technique in the left column being used to the appropriate example in the right column.

It irritates me so much!	A list can make something seem as if it dragging on and reflect someone's annoyance.
That's how I feel. Ridiculous.	By using a colon, the word that follows it is emphasised, which shows how annoyed the person is.
There is only one word to sum up how I feel: unhappy.	The use of exclamation marks makes someone sound annoyed.
The time dragged on and on and on ...	A one word sentence is blunt and to the point.
Five minutes, six minutes, seven minutes; when will the madness end?	By repeating the same word several times the person seems annoyed.