Meet Katherine, A Part-Time Babysitter

Katherine, from Portland, got her degree from the University of San Francisco last June. She has done everything from overnight jobs to traveling internationally with families. Here, she shares some aspects of her experience as a babysitter.

What's the most satisfactory aspect of your job?

I didn't think babysitting would be my passion as much as it has become I started with a family when their daughter was 6 weeks old and now, she's turning two; she continues to surprise me every day. To be an observer of her development fills my soul in so many ways. The connection I have with the families just gets deeper, and I don't feel like an employee but like a member of the family, it's beyond words. I get to go on vacation with them or eat all my meals at their house. I get paid for something that I love doing.

What would you consider important to become a babysitter?

My philosophy is influenced by how I grew up, and as I was going through college, I decided to take some training in RIE parenting (Resources for Infant Educators) to learn more about taking care of children Discipline is very important, but I never want to force my opinion on a child RIE is absolutely about respecting the child, and I'm a huge fan of that.

When you aren't babysitting, what do you do?

I brought my own bike from home, so I go biking here every day. I just love it
