The Shichi-go-san Festival

Shichi-go-san is a festival in Japan. It happens every year on November 15th because people think it brings good luck.

"Shichi-go-san" means "seven-five-three," and it's a special festival for children who are seven, five, and three years old. These ages are seen as important in Japan. Parents celebrate when boys turn three and five, and when girls turn three and seven.

At age seven, girls wear an "obi" (a cloth tied around the waist over a kimono) for the first time. At age five, boys wear special "hakama" pants (like the ones Samurai used to wear) in public for the first time. At age three, children are allowed to let their hair grow.

On this day, children dress up like people from the past and pretend to be adults.
