Women's Forum

Maryam: Today was a very exciting day for me. After waiting for a long time, I finally got my driving licence. It used to be impossible for women to get a licence here in Saudi Arabia. We used to take taxis everywhere and we needed permission from our husbands, fathers or sons to travel alone. Women still need a man's permission for some things, such as going abroad. But things are changing now.

Carla: Wow, Maryam, that's great news! Here in Manchester, most women drive and most husbands don't do anything without their wives' permission. Ha ha! I took some driving lessons when I was 18, but I never passed the test. It's hard for my husband because he drives the kids to school and back and does all the shopping. I really want to get my driving licence, but I'm not confident enough to start driving now.

Alma: I've got a driving licence, but I don't usually drive anywhere. I use the underground or I ride my bike around the city. I live in Copenhagen, and it's one of the most bike-friendly cities in the world. A lot of people ride bikes here.

Lynda: I can't imagine life without my car. I live in a small town in Texas, and I'm quite far from the city. It's difficult to get around without it. I started driving when I was 17 and when I finished school, I got a job as a bus driver. Now, I'm studying to be a mechanic, and I want to open my own car repair business.

Carla: I hope you're successful, Lynda. We need more women mechanics. Good luck, girls!
