Choose the correct answer.

The following text is for questions number 1-5!

It is the weirdest camel I ever see. It is famous for the large humps on its back. They live in the deserts.

Camels can eat mostly any type of vegetation including dry, thorny, or bitter plants that other animals may not want to eat. Their digestive system is tough and they have been known to eat dead carcasses, clothing, and even shoes when extremely hungry.

Camels store fat in their humps. This fat can be converted to water and energy when they haven't had food or water to drink for some time. Once they have used up all the fat in their humps, they become thin and floppy.

However what I like most about camels is their face. It looks so funny.
