Smart Clothes

As technology today is making even the most unthinkable possible, it won't take long for smart clothing to become the new trend in fashion. A few months ago, a group of scientists created prototypes that have wireless sensors and other devices like speakers and a Smartphone that work together to respond to the way a person feels. The sensors send information about the person's feelings to the phone and this device interprets emotions, relates them to a previously loaded message and displays a new one on the clothes sleeve.

There is another project that involves clothes with sensors and a timer. At certain set times during the day, the piece of cloth will emit a specific perfume that the person wants to smell; for example, a particular perfume in order to relax. The clothing item will also record fragrances that the user would like to perceive on some other occasions.

Another smart item of clothing is a blu-ray jacket that can reflect your mood by using signs and colours. This new creation also contains a GPS that can show you directions on a map that appears on the garment sleeve. Advances in technology apply to the use of innovative fabrics as well. The material used to design clothes is treated with antibacterial substances that prevent germs from sticking to the fibres. Besides, these smart garments have medical applications as the sensors can measure heart rate and temperature. Finally, there are some items of clothing that appeal to the sense of smell. Scientists believe that they will be useful for people who suffer from memory problems because smells can help us remember things that are usually associated with what we cannot remember.
