G Read about the London underground system and choose the correct answer, a, b or c.

The Tube

The London metro system is usually called the Underground or the Tube. The name the Tube comes from the shape of the tunnels, but actually about 55% of the lines are above the ground. The first part of the system opened in January 1863–it's older than any other underground railway system in the world–and in 1890 it started to use electric trains.

The Underground has 270 stations–the New York Subway has 421 and the Paris Metro has 300. There are about 400 kilometres of track, that's longer than the New York or Paris systems. There are eleven different lines. Each line has a name, and on the Tube map each line is a different colour.

Over a billion people travel on the London Underground every year, that's around three million people every day. But it's only number nine on the world list of passengers–the metro systems in Tokyo, Moscow, Seoul, New York and Mexico are all busier.
