Michael Durham predicts that by 2050, we will all have 'weekly digital health checks' in our homes, which run sensors over our bodies to check for signs of ill health and any abnormalities. Conditions can instantly be (23)_____ by the 'virtual doctor' inside the health machine and treated immediately, and if you need a prescription – it will be ordered and sent (24)_____automatically. If the digital health check picks up on a person being overweight, they will send a signal to the (25)_____house computer to modify their diet and book in for gym sessions (will it give us better willpower too?). (26)_____of all this immediate treatment, people will live far longer and won't be wiped out by disease or forms of cancer. Medical conditions that are considered rare today, will be far more known about and will be able to be cured quickly and efficiently.
