Design is everywhere. It's what attracted you to the last car or piece of furniture you bought and it's what ___(34) ____ online banking possible. It means that London taxis are easier to get in and out of and that Stella McCartney is a ___(35) ____ name. Design is driving whole business cultures forward as well as making sure that it's easier to find your way around places such as hospitals and airports. The single word 'design' encompasses an awful lot, and that's why the search for a single definition leads to lengthy debate to say the least.

There are broad definitions and specific ones - both have drawbacks. Either they're too general to be meaningful or they exclude too much. One definition, suggested by designer Richard Seymour, is "making things better for people". It emphasizes that design activity is ___(36) ____ concerned with human behavior and quality of life. But nurses or road sweepers could be justified in saying that they, too, "make things better for people". ___(37) ____ , an alternative definition that focuses on products or 3D realizations of ideas doesn't include the work of graphic designers, service designers and many other disciplines. There may be no absolute definition of design ___(38) ____ will please everyone, but attempting to find one does help us to pin down the unique set of skills that designers bring to the world.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the following questions from 44 to 50.

Whether they're cheering in the stadium, yelling at the referee from the sofa, or singing their team's victory song, sports fans exist all over the world. The long-term attachment to a particular sport or team appears to develop around the age of eight or nine, and the sport or team a person decides to follow is largely influenced by their social circle rather than their personal participation in a sport. Research into the psychology of sports fans has revealed some common principles that apply to the behavior of most fans.

Have you ever heard a sports fan boasting, 'We thrashed the other team today!' or 'We are top of the league at the moment'? Clearly the fan was not personally involved in achieving either success, yet they use the pronoun 'we' to report their team's performance. Fans' use of 'us' and 'we' to talk about their favourite team is common behavior. It demonstrates the strong sense of identity fans feel great and enjoy experiencing the victory as if they had played a part in the success themselves.

The opposite of this often happens after a team suffers a defeat. Fans in this case may refer to the team as 'they' in order to distance themselves from their team's disappointing match result. A dissatisfied fan is more likely to say 'they played really badly' as they want no responsibility for the depressing final score. Furthermore, they will be unlikely to wear any clothing that pinpoints them as a supporter after losing to a rival team. However, research shows that this is not the case with fiercely loyal or 'true' fans. They will carry on wearing their team scarf even when their team performs badly and will say with genuine sadness, 'they beat US three nil'.

Finally, and perhaps most interestingly, is the way in which sports fans swear by their superstitions or lucky charms. Wearing a certain item of clothing or carrying a lucky object is common practice of many. People who may not be superstitious in other aspect of their life will claim that wearing a certain item of lucky clothing will make their team play better. Equally, an action performed while the team lost will be considered bad luck and will be avoided in future for fear of jinxing the team. Of course in reality it makes no difference what kind of hat you wear or whether you have your lucky coin, but superstitions are taken very seriously by sports fans and I for one would not like to try and persuade them otherwise.
