Blending Families: Advice for Stepparents.

Blended families, or stepfamilies, are now very common. In the U.S, at least one-third of all children will be part of a blended family, before they reach the age of eighteen. At first, the changes for children in blended families may be difficult. But most blended families are able to work out their problems and live together happily.

What is a blended family?

In a blended family, one or both parents have children from earlier relationships. The parents may be divorced or widowed. When they decide to get married again, they bring children from their first marriage to live with their new husband or wife and, in some cases, his or her children.

What can new stepparents do?

While the new marriage is exciting for the parents, the children may be worried. Will they have a good relationship with their new stepfather or stepmother? What will their new stepbrothers and stepsisters be like? It´s a good idea for stepparents to be patient as good relationships in blending families are not easy.

1- Another name for a blended family is a _____

2- About _____ of children in the U.S live in blended families.

3- In a blended family, at least one parent has _____ from a previous marriage or relationship.

4- Children in a new blended family may feel _____

5- Stepparents should be _____ and understand that it takes time to build good relationships.
