A SPECIAL CELEBRATION

A report for Language News, by Richard Collins

It's 1 November and I'm in Mexico. I'm talking to Gabriela about a very special holiday: we're celebrating Day of the Innocents today and tomorrow is Day of the Dead. It's a time to remember, but it isn't a day to be scared. It's a happy holiday with parties, dancing, singing, fireworks and food. So, what are Gabriela and her family doing today?

A _____

"Here you can see we've got sugar skulls. All of the children have these for Day of the Dead. We aren't eating them at the moment; we're painting them with food colours and names. Purple and orange are important colours."

B _____

"Skulls, skeletons and flowers are an important part of the celebrations. We use them for fancy dress and face painting. In this picture, my cousin is painting my face. I'm not moving or talking. I'm standing very still because I don't want paint in my eyes!"

C _____

"It's the evening and we're sitting at the table now. We're having a special dinner for this celebration. Here's a photo of my food. There's salad, rice, a taco and enchiladas! We have fruit, special bread and hot chocolate, too. Do you feel hungry?"
