Reading Comprehension.

To read and analyze the following text and answer the following questions.

Listening for personal information

Anne: When I was a child, about 6 years old, I went for the first time to a classic music concert. I remember that it was a concert called "Spring" by Vivaldi. I simply loved it. I asked my music teacher the names of the instruments playing in that concert, because the sound of those strings really got to me. From that moment, learning about those instruments became a personal task. I listened to more music, and my music teacher told me that the most important sounds in those songs were the violin and the violoncello. Soon, I learned that the sound of the violin was very high, and the one of the cello was lower, and more profound.

I asked my dad if I could play this instrument, but all he could get me was a guitar. He told me those two instruments were similar, nearly the same. Soon I started taking guitar lessons. After a while, I stopped learning to play guitar, and became frustrated about it. Soon, my guitar was left abandoned in a corner in my room, and it ended up in the attic of my house. I wish I learned at least to play the guitar. Music is something that I really enjoy.
