FINDING BILL

If you lose your dog the first thing you'll probably do is check your local shelter, put up a poster or post an advertisement. But what if your dog is easily frightened, panics and runs away from everyone including his family? Then you should follow the advice of Don and Marianne Blackwell. They are the proud owners of Bill, a Labrador. They refused to give up on their pet even when it took them close to one year to find him and bring him home.

Bill had jumped over a fence and run away. Although the Blackwells immediately launched an organised search, they came up with nothing. It seemed as if Bill had vanished from the face of the earth. Eight months later Bill was spotted by a neighbour and Don and Marianne were able to discover where Bill was hiding. He had found shelter in an abandoned home. They began to bring him food, hoping that Bill would approach them, but he would take off in terror. They then came across a pet detective website which offered advice on how to catch "a hard-to-catch" dog. It advised them to set up a digital wildlife camera near the dog to monitor its activity and to put up the largest size dog trap available. The idea was that Bill would think it was a kennel and enter it in order to sleep. Bill however, was just too afraid to enter the dog trap.

Eight weeks later Bill was no closer to home. They decided they needed a new plan, so they called a vet who managed to sedate Bill. When Bill had given up his fight and was asleep, Don and Marianne transported him to the emergency vet surgery. The vet gave him a check-up and reassured them that Bill was quite healthy. The next morning when Bill woke up at home to three dogs and his family, he wagged his tail and decided that life was good. This would be Bill's home forever!

28. Pet owners usually place an advertisement in the local paper or design posters when they lose their pets. _____

29. Don and Marianne abandoned their search for Ben after a year. _____

30. A few days had passed before Don and Marianne realized that their dog was missing. _____
