It's a bird's life

There are about 10,000 types of birds in the world. Different types live in different places – in forests, at the top of mountains, in our gardens or near water. Some birds come out during the day, while others come out at night. Some can fly and others can't, and some, such as penguins, can even swim. Birds have wings, feathers and a beak. Many of them eat insects, but some eat small animals, including fish and other birds. Others eat plants, fruit and nuts. Birds are really important. They keep insects under control and help plants by spreading seeds around.
