Beyond the Classroom

In many Vietnamese cities and towns, a growing number of teenagers are spending part of their free time doing volunteer work. They clean up parks, visit elderly people who live alone, or help younger children with reading and maths after school. A 2023 survey by the Vietnam Youth Federation found that nearly 40 percent of students aged 13 to 17 had taken part in at least one community activity during the school year. For many of them, it was not something their school required. They chose to do it on their own.

Teachers and youth workers say the reasons vary. Some teenagers want to build skills for their future careers. Others simply want to feel useful. A number of young people say they feel disconnected from the world around them and that helping others gives them a sense of purpose that studying alone does not. This is not a problem limited to Vietnam. Reports from several countries show that teenagers who spend time in their communities tend to feel less lonely and more confident in their daily lives.

Of course, not every young person has the time or the chance to volunteer. School pressure is high, and many students have extra classes in the evenings and on weekends. But small actions can still make a difference. Saying hello to an elderly neighbour, picking up litter on the way home, or helping a friend through a hard time are all ways of being part of something larger than oneself. Experts say that young people who develop this habit early are more likely to become engaged and compassionate adults later in life.

Question 31: Which of the following is FALSE according to the passage?

A. Many students participate in community activities without being asked by their school.

B. Volunteering can help teenagers build essential skills for their future professional lives.

C. All students in Vietnam have plenty of free time to engage in community work.

D. Helping others can provide young people with a meaningful sense of daily purpose.

Question 33: The word "disconnected" in the second paragraph is OPPOSITE in meaning to _____.

A. lonely B. attached C. separated D. different

Question 34: What is the primary reason some teenagers feel that studying alone is insufficient?

A. It fails to provide them with the necessary grades for future university applications.

B. It lacks the sense of purpose that they derive from contributing to others.

C. It keeps them from socializing with their elderly neighbors in their local area.

D. It prevents them from gaining practical skills that are taught in volunteer programs.

Question 35: According to the third paragraph, why might small actions be important for students?

A. They are the only way to avoid the intense pressure of evening extra classes.

B. They offer a way to contribute to society despite having limited free time.

C. They ensure that all students will become compassionate leaders in the future.

D. They help students finish their chores on the way home from school easily.

Question 36: Which of the following best summarises the main content of the passage?

A. The various types of volunteer work available for students in Vietnamese cities.

B. The negative consequences of school pressure on teenagers' extracurricular life.

C. The scientific research on the link between volunteering and academic success.

D. The significance of volunteering in shaping teenagers' personal growth and purpose.
