The Skycar

You can drive the Skycar or fly it like a plane. Gideon Cardozo, a British engineer, designed the Skycar in just 18 months. In 2009, Cardozo decided to take the Skycar from the UK to Africa but he didn't travel alone. He went with Neil Laughton, who is a driver and a pilot. They drove along roads and they flew over mountains and seas. Finally, they arrived in Timbuktu, Western Africa, more than two months later.

The SQuba submarine

When Frank Rinderknecht saw his hero James Bond drive his car into the sea, he decided that he wanted to build a similar car. The result was the SQuba submarine. The SQuba can travel at 120kph on land, 6.5kph on water and 3.25kph underwater. This machine is completely ecological but it is also very expensive: it costs nearly €1 million!

The Couchbike

Two friends invented the Couchbike*. They tried to ride their special bicycle across a national park in Canada but two police officers stopped them and inspected their Couchbike. Why? Well, it was more than two metres wide, it was very slow and the cyclists didn't have helmets. But the police officers didn't know what to do – Couchbikes weren't in their manual – so the two friends continued their journey.
