A businessman wanted an office boy, and nearly fifty boys applied for the place. In a very short time he chose one of them, and sent all the rest away.

A friend, who happened to be in the office, said to him, "Why did you choose that boy? He had not a single recommendation with him."

"You are mistaken," said the businessman, "he had a great many. He wiped his feet when he came in, and shut the door after him, showing that he was orderly and tidy. He gave up his seat immediately to that old man, showing that he was kind and thoughtful. He took off his cap when he came in, and answered my questions respectfully, showing that he was polite. He lifted up the book which I had purposely laid on the floor and placed it on the table, and did not step over it as all the others did, showing that he was careful. And he waited quietly for his turn and did not push the others aside, showing that he was modest. When I talked with him, I noticed that his clothes were carefully ironed, his hair in nice order, and his teeth as white as milk. When he wrote his name, I observed that his fingernails were clean. Don't you call these letters of recommendation? I do; and what I can tell about a boy by using my eyes for ten minutes is more worth than all the fine letters he may bring me."
