One day, Daisy was helping her grandmother to tidy the basement of her house.

"Put all those old boxes in the big bin across the street, please Daisy," said Grandma.

Daisy carried six boxes to the bin. It was hard work. The bottom of the last box was broken and when she picked it up, everything inside fell on the floor. Daisy was picking up all the pieces of paper when she found an interesting old green book. She opened it and saw it was a diary, which was more than 50 years old. She went upstairs and showed the diary to her grandmother.

"I don't believe it!" said Grandma. "Where did you find this?"

"It was in one of those boxes, Grandma," said Daisy.

"You're very clever – I though this was lost."

"But what is it, Grandma?" asked Daisy.

"This is your grandfather's diary. You know that he was a famous artist, don't you?"

"Yes, I do. I've seen his paintings in the museum in town," said Daisy.

The next day, Daisy and her Grandma took the diary to the museum. When the man who worked at the museum saw the diary, he was very excited.

"This is a great treasure!" he said. "Please could you give it to the museum so that lots of people can see it?"

Grandma was sad to lose the diary again but happy that it was in the museum where lots of people could read it.
