Cauca 2040: Young Entrepreneurs Changing the Land

READ THE SHORT STORY BELOW:

In the mountains of Silvia, Cauca, a group of students from the University of Cauca is going to start a project that will change the way people think about farming. They are going to create a company called EcoCafé Cauca, which will sell organic coffee produced by local farmers. Their goal is to protect the environment and help the community grow.

The students are going to work with farmers and teach them to use natural fertilizers and reduce pollution. In the next few months, they are going to organize workshops on recycling and composting. Everyone in the community is excited because this project will create new jobs and will improve life in the region.

Next year, the EcoCafé team will travel to Popayán to present their project at an international fair. They will also create a website to sell their coffee online and share stories about the farmers. They believe this platform will attract international support and will connect them with eco-friendly companies.

In the future, EcoCafé Cauca will expand to other parts of the department. The group will help more farmers sell organic products like honey and cocoa. "We are going to build a better future for our land," said Andrés, one of the students.
