B9. When do we think about doing up our home, we usually concentrate on the furniture,
B10. carpets and curtains, but we tend to ignore the need to choose so suitable colours for
B11. the walls in each other of the rooms of the house. Most interior designers agree that
B12. the choice of colours should have always be the starting point when it comes to decorating.
B13. But they also say that since the days of having so little choice are gone, making up the
B14. right decision which colour to choose for which space may seems an incredibly difficult
B15. thing to do. That's why, before you attempt to decorate any of the walls, which you
B16. had better learn some basic rules. For example, lots red is good for a dining-room; but if B17. you use it in the bedroom, it may actually to stop you from sleeping. Another example might
B18. be to apply yellow to cheer it a place up, especially one that doesn't get much sunlight.
