The Maori tribe of New Zealand have a legend of a bird that eats people. Many people thought that the story wasn't true, but in 1870 the bones of a big bird, the Haast Eagle, were discovered. The bird was very big, around three metres tall and 18kg. It lived in the mountains and forests of the south island of New Zealand and ate meat. It disappeared about 500 years ago.

Many tribes in the Amazon forests in South America have stories of the black jaguar. It lives in the forests and eats small animals like deer, birds and fish. The jaguar is big, about three metres long, and weighs about 120kg. It is in danger and there are only about 15,000 in the wild.
