II. Choose the correct answers.

Climate change is having a serious impact on farming around the world. In many regions, (1) _____ months of heavy rainfall have caused rivers to overflow and destroyed entire harvests. In other areas, the opposite problem occurs — long dry seasons cause water to evaporate quickly from the soil, making it harder for crops such as squash and other vegetables to grow. Farmers who rely on (2) _____ to protect their crops from insects are finding that these chemicals are also damaging the protective layer of soil, making the land less productive over time.

In response, many agricultural businesses are looking for smarter solutions. One growing trend is (3) _____, where crops are grown in stacked layers inside a warehouse rather than on open land. This approach can (4) _____ water usage significantly and allows farmers to produce food year-round regardless of weather conditions. Some companies are also trying to make their entire supply chain (5) _____ by repurposing waste materials and using only biodegradable packaging throughout the process.

(1) A. consecutive	B. exceptional	C. above	D. zero-waste
(2) A. supply chains	B. trading sites	C. warehouses	D. pesticides
(3) A. repurposing	B. the supply chain	C. vertical farming	D. the atmosphere
(4) A. wipe out	B. run out of	C. carve out	D. cut down on
(5) A. biodegradable	B. zero-waste	C. consecutive	D. exceptional

III. Match the words/phrases with the correct definitions.

1. pesticide	1-	a. to destroy or eliminate something completely
2. overflow	2-	b. a method of growing crops in stacked layers indoors, often using artificial lighting and controlled conditions
3. loosen	3-	c. a chemical substance used to kill insects or other organisms that damage crops
4. wipe out	4-	d. to flow over the edge of something because it is too full
5. vertical farming	5-	e. to make something less tight or less firmly fixed

IV. Listen and fill in each blank with ONE word only.

Jake: Have you finished the section on vertical farming yet?

Maya: Almost. I was reading about how some (1) _____ have been converted into fully indoor farms. They basically repurpose old storage buildings to grow food all year round.

Jake: That's smart. Especially now that consecutive years of drought are wiping out harvests in so many regions. Farmers can't rely on the weather anymore.

Maya: Exactly. And when rainfall is below (2) _____ for months, soil dries out so fast that water just evaporates before the roots can absorb it.

Jake: And then the opposite happens in other places — too much rain and everything (3) _____ and floods the fields.

Maya: Right. It's becoming harder to maintain a stable supply (4) _____ under these conditions. That's why so many companies are trying to reduce their reliance on outdoor agriculture.

Jake: Do you think zero-waste farming is actually achievable though? Or is it just a marketing term?

Maya: I think it depends on how seriously businesses take it. If the entire process — from production to packaging — uses only (5) _____ materials, then it's possible.

Jake: That would take a huge shift in how supply chains are managed. But I think younger companies are starting to carve out a real position in that market.

Maya: Let's hope so. Otherwise, we're going to run out of viable (6) _____ a lot sooner than people think.

V. Read the text and decide if the statements are TRUE or FALSE.

Climate change is reshaping agriculture in ways that scientists describe as exceptional. In many parts of the world, high rainfall over consecutive seasons has caused rivers to overflow, wiping out entire harvests and forcing farmers to rebuild from scratch. In drier regions, the opposite is true — water evaporates rapidly from the soil, and crops such as squash struggle to survive without irrigation. The use of pesticides can damage the protective layer of soil and harm the wider environment over time.

LIVEWORKSHEETS

To address these challenges, many businesses are looking to repurpose existing infrastructure. Old warehouses are being converted for vertical farming, allowing companies to cut down on water usage and reduce their dependence on unpredictable weather. Some organisations have gone further, committing to fully zero-waste supply chains that use only biodegradable materials. While these approaches are promising, critics warn that without broader changes to trading sites and distribution networks, even the most innovative farms will eventually run out of the resources needed to scale up.

Statements:

1. According to the text, the effects of climate change on farming are considered ordinary and expected.
   → _____
2. The text says that pesticides can cause damage beyond the crops they are meant to protect.
   → _____
3. Vertical farming requires building entirely new structures rather than adapting existing ones.
   → _____
4. According to the text, some businesses have committed to eliminating waste entirely from their supply chains.
   → _____
5. The text suggests that innovative farming methods alone are enough to guarantee long-term success.
   → _____
