TASK 5

A Day in the Countryside

Living in the countryside is very different from life in the city. In rural areas, the air is fresh, the surroundings are peaceful, and people often live closer to nature. Many villagers work in agriculture, growing crops or raising livestock. Some families are even self-sufficient, producing their own food and making their own products.

A typical day in the countryside starts early. Farmers wake up before sunrise to feed animals or water the fields. Children help their parents with simple tasks before going to school. After school, they may help with herding cattle or collecting firewood.

Even though modern technology is becoming more available in rural areas, life in the countryside remains simple and traditional. People value community and often join in communal work like cleaning the roads or helping neighbors build a new house.

While the countryside doesn't have as many entertainment options as the city, it offers something different: peace, quiet, and a close connection to nature. For many, that is more valuable than anything else.

1. What is one main feature of life in the countryside?

A. Noisy and fast
B. Crowded and stressful
C. Peaceful and close to nature
D. Expensive and modern

2. What kind of work do most villagers do?

A. Construction and sales
B. Banking and office jobs
C. Farming and raising animals
D. Teaching and studying

3. What do children in the countryside often do before or after school?

A. Play video games
B. Help with family chores
C. Go shopping
D. Watch TV all day

4. What does the word "communal" mean in the sentence: "People value community and often join in communal work"?

A. Private
B. Done for fun
C. Done together by a group
D. Done by machines

5. What is the writer's opinion about countryside life?

A. It's boring and old-fashioned
B. It lacks technology so it's hard
C. It's peaceful and valuable
D. It's only for older people
