
Once, a shepherd boy looked after a flock of sheep near a village. He felt bored and wanted to play a joke. So he shouted, "Wolf! Wolf! Help!"

The villagers heard him and came running to help. But there was no wolf. The boy laughed at them. He did the same again another day. The villagers came again, but it was another lie.

One day, a real wolf came and attacked the sheep. The boy was scared and shouted, "Wolf! Wolf! Help!" But this time, the villagers thought he was lying again. No one came to help.

The wolf killed some sheep and ran away. The boy learned a hard lesson.

Moral: Lies destroy trust.
