Child prodigies

A child prodigy is a child who has a very special ability in a particular area. Here are some examples of child prodigies from the world of music.

Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart was born in Austria in 1756 and is one of history's most famous child prodigies. His father described him as the 'miracle that God let be born in Salzburg'. He started playing the harpsichord (a string instrument with a keyboard like that of the piano) at the age of four, and started to compose his own pieces of music at the age of five. When he was just eight years old, he went on a tour of Europe with his father and older sister (who was also an incredibly talented musician) and he published his first music.

More recently, 12-year-old Russian pianist Evgeny Kissin left his audience astonished when he played with the Moscow Philharmonic Orchestra in 1984. He was not well known before that performance, but the next morning he was a star. When he was still a baby, Evgeny enjoyed listening to his older sister playing the piano and singing the tunes he had heard. At the age of two he took up the piano, but it wasn't until he went to school that he learned to read music. He gave his first performance when he was seven years old and it was his own music that he played.

Five-year-old Chinese-Canadian Ryan Wang caused a sensation when he appeared on The Ellen Show in the USA in 2013. When the show's presenter Ellen Degeneres asked him to explain his remarkable talent for playing the piano, little Ryan said: 'It's just in my memory' and 'it just goes to my fingers'. 101-year-old grandma Dorothy Landsay saw him playing on television and became his biggest fan. When the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation heard about this, they asked Ryan to play in person for the elderly lady so that she could hear him playing more clearly. The two became good friends and Ryan said: 'I like playing for Grandma Dorothy because it makes her happy'.
