Most people seem to worry about getting old and I really don't understand why. Of course, when I was young I couldn't imagine being old. I remember as a teenager thinking that thirty was old and I also remember when I turned forty, thinking that the world was coming to an end. But in fact, as I've gotten older I've realized that there are many advantages. For example, I never have to stand up on the bus anymore. If there's no room, somebody always stands up and offers me their seat, and in the supermarket people are always helping me with my shopping bags. At first, I was rather offended by such behavior, but then I realized that people were just being polite and that, in fact, I should take it as a compliment. To be honest, sometimes I deliberately exaggerate my age! You know, walk more slowly or groan a bit. I know that sounds bad, but I've always been lazy and it's too easy to take advantage.

However, there are some things that annoy me about getting older. Why is it I'm not supposed to like modern music? And what's wrong with an old man playing computer games? Sometimes when I go shopping and buy a CD or a game, I have to pretend it's for my grandchildren. I recently bought the new Snow Patrol album, and the store assistant asked me if I was sure it was what my grandson wanted. When I told her it was for me, she looked quite surprised!
