EARTHQUAKE

Earthquake occurs in places where earth movements take place. An earthquake is a sudden movement or tremor of the earth. } 1

Earthquake can be destructive. Cities and millions of lives can be destroyed. To rebuild the destroyed city, huge sum of money is needed, not to mention the time taken to rebuild it.

Earthquakes are caused by powerful forces at work inside the earth. These forces cause underground pressure and movement. Movement and pressure build up tension and trap energy in the rock strata inside the earth. When the pressure becomes too great, the rock will snap, creating a fault. At the same time, the stored-up tension and energy are released. An earthquake therefore occurs. } 2

A severe earthquake is estimated to be as powerful as one hundred atomic bombs, shooting out energy in waves, most of which is driven underground, thus lessening the effect.

Fire sparked off by an earthquake can be a great danger to the cities. Waves running along the surface of the ground not only destroy buildings, but can also damage waterpipes and start fires simultaneously. Firemen will be helpless against the fire if there is no water. For this reason, many cities "prone" to earthquake store water in special places so that there will be water even if under-ground waterpipes are broken. } 3
