A day in Space

Life in space

The International Space Station (ISS) is a big spaceship. Find out about life there:

- Six astronauts usually live there. They usually stay for between three and six months. Sometimes other astronauts visit for one or two weeks. A total of ten astronauts can stay there.
- It takes two days to get to the station from Earth.
- The astronauts are different nationalities and there are men and women.
- Time is different in space – there isn't night and day like on Earth.
- The astronauts are awake for twelve hours every day. They are always busy! They do a lot of science experiments. They clean and repair the station too.
- They do exercise for two hours every day to stay strong.
- There aren't any showers in the space station! The astronauts wash every morning with very little water.
- There are three meals a day, breakfast, lunch and dinner. There are also snacks if they are hungry. Food in space is different – astronauts don't cook, they eat dry food. There isn't any fruit.
- Their bedrooms are very small and they don't sleep on beds – they float in the air!
- They use email and a special phone to contact their families and friends.
