Animals in danger

People have been living on our planet for many years. They live in different continents and different countries. And of course people depend on the planet, on the sun, on wildlife around them. But people use natural resources more, hunt more than they need and that is why lots of species are on the brink of extinction. Many of them are in danger. Indian tigers and African elephants are among them. People have hunted and killed many of them. But why? What for?

Tigers and elephants are often dangerous animals. Tigers can kill cows, sheep and other domestic animals and sometimes they can also kill men, and they kill in order to protect themselves. Unfortunately, there is a category of people who are ready to kill just for fun or porches who hunt the animals beautiful parts of the body. They even kill the species which are registered in the Red Book. They know that will get a lot of money, as the prices are high.

The results are very sad you know. There are few Indian tigers on the Earth nowadays. Many of them are usually old sick animals and they don't hunt people, but hide from them in deep dark forests. Or they used to hide earlier, because the trees also have been cut. And there is a question: "Have those animals got a future?"

We can ask the same question about African elephants. They are wonderful animals. They can help, entertain people. Last century Africa was full of elephants and nowadays you can't see them very often.
