Part 3 (Questions 19-26)

Read the text below and answer the following questions. Choose the best answer A, B, C or D.

- 1 It is perhaps the most reproduced, recycled and ripped off image of the 20th Century. Che Guevara, his eyes framed by heavy brows, a single-starred beret pulled over his unruly hair, stares out of the shot with glowering intensity. It's now more than 50 years since the Argentine-born rebel was shot dead, so any young radicals who cheered on his revolutionary struggles in Cuba and Bolivia are well into middle age.
- 2 But the image has been infinitely repeated - emblazoned on T-shirts and sprayed on to walls, transformed into pop art and used to wrap ice-creams and sell cigarettes - and its appeal has not faded. "There is no other image like it. What other image has been sustained in this way?" asks Trisha Ziff, the curator of a touring exhibition on the iconography of Che. "Che Guevara has become a brand. And the brand's logo is the image, which represents change. It has become the icon of the outside thinker, at whatever level - whether it is anti-war, pro-green or anti-globalisation," she says.
- 3 The unchecked proliferation of the picture - based on a photograph by Alberto Korda in 1960 - is partly due to a political choice by Korda and others not to demand payment for non-commercial use of the image. Jim Fitzpatrick, who produced the ubiquitous high-contrast drawing in the late 1960s as a young graphic artist, said he actively wanted his art to be disseminated.
- 4 "I deliberately designed it to breed like rabbits," he says of his image, which removes the original photograph's shadows and volume to create a stark and emblematic graphic portrait. "I was determined that the image should receive the broadest possible circulation," he adds.
- 5 For Ms Ziff, Che Guevara's murder also marks the beginning of the mythical image. "The birth of the image happens at the death of Che in October 1967," she says. "He was good-looking, he was young, but more than that, he died for his ideals, so he automatically becomes an icon."
- 6 The story of the original photograph, of how it left Cuba and was carried by admirers to Europe before being reinterpreted in Mr Fitzpatrick's iconic drawing, is a fascinating journey in its own right. Alberto Korda captured his famous frame on 5 March 1960 during a mass funeral in Havana. A day earlier, a French cargo ship loaded with ammunition had exploded in the city's harbour, killing some 80 Cubans - an act Fidel Castro blamed on the US. Korda, Fidel Castro's official photographer, describes Che's expression in the picture, which he labelled "Guerrillero Heroico" (the heroic fighter), as "encabronado y doliente" - angry and sad. Unpublished, the picture was seen only by those who passed through Korda's studio, where it hung on a wall. One man who brought the image to Europe was the leftist Italian intellectual, Giangiacomo Feltrinelli, who distributed posters across Italy in 1967. After that, Korda's photograph made an appearance in several European magazines. Mr Fitzpatrick first came across a tiny version of it in the German weekly. Only months later, when he finally got his hands on a larger version of the photograph, was he able to produce the image that has such universal appeal. "I'd got an original copy of the image sent to me by a guy involved with a group of Dutch anarchists, called the Provo."
- 7 After Che Guevara's death, an outraged Mr Fitzpatrick furiously reprinted originals of the poster and sent it to left-wing political activist groups across Europe. Part of his fury stemmed from vivid memories working behind a bar in Ireland as a teenager, and seeing Che walk in. The revolutionary was briefly exploring the homeland of his Irish ancestors during a stopover on a flight to Moscow. "I must have been around 16," Mr Fitzpatrick remembers. "It was a bright, sunny morning. I knew immediately who he was. He was an immensely charming man - likeable, roguish, good fun and very proud of being Irish."

8 Mr Fitzpatrick's version of Che arrived on the continent as many countries were in a state of flux, says Ms Ziff. "His death was followed by demonstrations, first in Milan and then elsewhere. Very soon afterwards there was the Prague Spring and May '68 in France. Europe was in turmoil. People wanted change, disruption and rebellion and he became a symbol of that change."

9 As time went on, the meaning and the man represented by the image became separated in the western context, Ms Ziff explains. But in Latin America, she points out, Che Guevara's face remains a symbol of armed revolution and indigenous struggle. Combining capitalism and commerce, religion and revolution, the icon remains unchallenged, Ms Ziff says. "There is no other image that remotely takes us to all these different places."

Part 4 (Questions 27-32)

You are going to read a story. Six sentences have been removed from the passage. Choose from the sentences (A-H) to fit each gap (27-32). There are two extra sentences which you do not need to use.

The Dog Boy

Are you afraid of dogs? Dogs can be scary. Large dogs can jump up on you and knock you down and a harmless-looking small dog can bite. But a dog expert from the USA, Cesar Millan has been able to handle even the most difficult and dangerous dogs since he was a child.

If you've ever seen Millan on his daily four-hour walk with around 40 dogs, you might almost believe that Millan speaks their language. The dogs obey his every command. Perhaps that is why people call him a "dog whisperer".  In fact, Millan claims he understands the way a dog's mind works.

His philosophy is simple. He says that dogs are descended from wolves and they think in the same way. Wolves are social creatures that live in groups. In every pack of wolves there is one special wolf that all the others obey.

Unfortunately, few people understand this basic fact about dog psychology, so Millan has to train the owners to communicate properly with their pets. What does this mean? For a start, it means letting the dog know you're their boss - not their best friend or their parent.  Instead, the dog really needs lots of exercise and clear rules in order to behave well and you can give it love and affection only after the dog obeys you.

It was as a child in Mexico that Millan first became interested in dogs. While growing up, he used to spend time on a farm where he watched dogs working with cows. Milan was fascinated by how intelligent the dogs were and later, when he was 15, he got a job helping out in a vet's office.  Millan realised he had a special gift and he began to dream of going to Hollywood and becoming a famous dog trainer.

Millan was in his 20s before he finally managed to reach America.  Later, he got a job working in a place that takes care of dogs and people began to notice that Millan had a way with dogs. Soon more and more people began asking him to help them out with their pets. His first real break came when Hollywood actor Will Smith asked Millan for a hand with his dog. The actor and his wife were so impressed with Millan that they recommended him to all their friends.

Today, Millan has achieved his dream. He has his own dog psychology centre, he's the author of a well-known book and he has his own popular television show called "The Dog Whisperer".  ("A lot of people don't realise I've been working with dogs for more than 20 years - long before my TV show or book," he says. "Success followed me because I was following my dream of being the best dog trainer in the world.")

- A. How does Millan feel about his success?
- B. Lots of people are and with good reason.
- C. At first, he spoke no English and he had to take any job he could find.
- D. The teenager was so good at handling dogs that people started calling him “el perrero”- Spanish for “the dog boy”.
- E. According to Millan, in many countries, especially in America, owners tend to be too loving and treat their dogs like children.
- F. However, it is important to use the proper method when walking your dog.
- G. This is the name given to people who have a special ability to communicate with dogs.
- H. Apparently, like their wild ancestors, dogs will only respect and obey their owners if they respect them as their leaders.
