Today, nearly 1.7 million people live on Manhattan Island in New York City. However, four hundred years ago, just after European explorers first arrived in North America, it was very different. Wild animals such as bears and big cats used to live in the forests on the island, and people called the Lenape lived in small villages near the ocean. They used to eat mostly fish because there were so many in the rivers and ocean nearby. The Lenape called their island Manhattan. It means "island of many hills".

___ A. Which people thought of the name for Manhattan Island?
___ B. What sort of wild animals once lived on the island?
___ C. What is Manhattan like today?
_4_ D. Who used to get most of their food from the rivers and ocean?
___ E. Where on the island did the Lenape make their homes?
