Review: Broadway Market, London

One of the most exciting places to visit in London is Broadway market. It's popular with tourists, but many local people visit it too. There's a lot to see and do.

First, we looked at the work of a few very talented artists. Then we went to a fashion show. Some of the designs were a bit weird, but they were all very creative! They were not as cheap as in high street shops, but the designs were more inventive and original. Finally, we all tried a few different international street food dishes, something the market is famous for.

I had pancakes with honey and a few strawberries on top, and a lovely smoothie made from peaches and watermelons. You should definitely visit this place, even if you only have a little time. But you must get there early. It gets busier and more crowded later on. And you mustn't eat breakfast before you go, because there is so much delicious food there to enjoy!
