A Global Language

English is one of the most widely spoken languages in the world. However, people do not speak English in the same way everywhere. Different countries have their own versions of English, which we call World Englishes.

In the United States and the United Kingdom, people speak different kinds of English. For example, in American English, people say "apartment," but in British English, they say "flat." In the U.S., people take the "elevator," while in the U.K., they use the "lift." Even the pronunciation of some words is different.

Many countries, such as India, Singapore, and Nigeria, also have their own varieties of English. These forms of English mix local words, grammar, and pronunciation with standard English. For example, in India, people often say "prepone" instead of "reschedule" to mean changing a meeting to an earlier time. In Singapore, people use "lah" at the end of sentences to express emotion, like "Okay, lah!"

The spread of World Englishes is because of history, business, and technology. In the past, the British Empire brought English to many parts of the world. Today, global trade, movies, and the internet help different kinds of English grow. People from different cultures use English in their own way, making the language richer and more diverse.

World Englishes show that English is not just one language, but many. Each variety of English reflects the culture and identity of the people who speak it. Instead of saying one version is "better" than another, we can celebrate these differences. After all, the most important thing is communication!

Question 31: What is the main idea of the passage?

A. How English is used in movies and business.

B. The differences between American and British English.

C. The reasons why English is difficult to learn.

D. The diversity of English around the world.

Question 35: According to the passage, which of the following is TRUE about World Englishes?

A. They are completely different languages from standard English.

B. They mix local words, grammar, and pronunciation with English.

C. Only India, Singapore, and Nigeria have their own versions of English.

D. The British Empire played no role in the spread of English.

Question 36: How does the writer organize the passage?

A. By comparing British and American English before discussing other varieties.

B. By listing all the differences between English dialects worldwide.

C. By explaining the history of the English language.

D. By describing how technology changes English pronunciation.
