German businessman Hans-Werner Lohneis was feeling good. He was _____ China to visit the factory that made the bikes he sold in _____ shops. They were popular _____ his buyers seemed happy with them. The factory could make as many _____ he wanted and the arrangement worked well _____ both companies.

The factory owner, Mr Chiu, showed Hans-Werner around. He was pleased _____ see that everything was clean and tidy, and the workers looked happy. They had an interesting discussion _____ bicycle technology, with a young woman from the local college doing _____ translation for them.

However, when Mr Chiu gave him one _____ the new bikes he was going to buy, he realised _____ once that there was a problem. It was difficult to turn the front wheel, and _____ made a strange noise.

Hans-Werner hid his disappointment while _____ thought about what to do. He had a lot of experience of doing business in East Asia, and he knew that a direct argument could spoil _____ good relationship.

Then he had _____ idea. »Let's _____ for a little ride«, he suggested. »The countryside around here looks beautiful.«

He and Mr Chiu rode together for _____ an hour. Neither of them mentioned the wheels, even though the problem _____ obvious. Instead, they chatted about the weather and about life in China. _____ Hans-Werner was certain that Mr Chiu understood his message.

When _____ got back to the factory, he made the decision to order 4.000 bikes. He knew they _____ going to _____ perfect, and he was right!
