The migration

In the final decades of the twentieth century the collapse of the economy and unemployment generated a strong current of migration to the outside. Many people, especially very poor sectors, traveled to other countries in search of work. Ecuador now has large contingents of legal and illegal migrants in the United States, Canada, Spain, Italy, Switzerland and other countries.

Migration has greatly impacted our country and it has been more integrated to the world, it brought remittances, which were at one time its second source of incomes, but has also caused depopulation and the deterioration of family relationships like the disintegration of many households.
