Last night my parents, aunts, and uncles sewed a banner for Granddad's birthday. It was made from cloth patches sewn onto a large sheet. My brothers and I helped. We cut out bright letters and shapes from scraps of old shirts. We also kept the needles threaded. To make a colorful border, everyone wrote good wishes around the banner edges. We'll hang it up at the yearly gathering when Granddad's children and their families get together for his special day.
