With its black-and-white coloring, cuddly shape, and sad-looking face, the giant panda is a precious animal to the people of China. Sadly, with the loss of the bamboo forests in which they live, the panda is becoming scarce. To restore the dwindling<sup>1</sup> number of pandas, various projects are in progress. One of these is the Wolong Panda Reserve in Sichuan Province, which is the best-known panda reserve in China. The center was founded in 1980 to accommodate captive pandas for the purposes of research and producing baby pandas. The success of the program has been dramatic, and has resulted in pandas being given or loaned to zoos around the world.

However, on May 12, 2008, disaster struck when the area in which the reserve is located was hit by a powerful earthquake. Two pandas died as a result of the earthquake, but fortunately most of the others escaped injury.
