To talk about imaginary situations in the present or in the future, we can use If* + simple past. To talk about the effect or the consequences of such imaginary situations we add would.
Example:

If I were an adult, I would live in a house by the sea.

We can swap the order of the clauses: first we can talk about the effect of the imaginary situation, and then we can introduce the imaginary situation.
Example:

I would be very happy if I could buy a red car.

When we use the verb to be with If* + simple past we can use both was and were with I, he, she and it.
Example:

If she was / were an adult, she would buy a house.

We also use would to talk about likes and dislikes.
Example:

I would like (or would love) to travel around Europe.
