Scientists have found fragments of a skeleton which belonged to one of the most famous of all extinct animals, the dodo. The dodo was a big heavy bird that couldn't fly. This species became extinct more than 300 years ago. Dodo birds lived on an island in the Indian Ocean. When European sailors first landed there, they saw a lot of slow-moving birds who did very little to protect themselves from hunters. Sadly, the birds' meat turned out to be good for eating. So very soon there were no more dodos. You will be able to see this bird only in a picture.
By the way, the bird's name "dodo" comes from the Portuguese word for "stupid". That's what people thought about the birds that couldn't help themselves to survive.
