All insects have six legs. The bodies of insects are divided into head, thorax and abdomen. Some insects have a pair of antennae on their heads. These antennae are used for feeling, smelling and tasting. Some insects have a pair or two pairs of wings that enable them to fly in the air.

There are so many different kinds of insects that it would be hard to learn about all of them.

Some insects, such as beautiful butterflies and the bees, feed on the nectar of flowers. Other insects commonly seen in the garden, such as grasshoppers and ladybirds eat the leaves of plants. Some insects are meat-eater. They feed on other insects. The praying mantis is one of them.

Other insects like mosquitoes, ants and houseflies can be found in our houses. Mosquitoes and houseflies are harmful insects because they bring diseases to humans.
