Travelling for business involves visiting 1. (same, different, much) places for work. You have to manage 2. (your, his, our) time well in order to see any sites, but it can 3. (being, been, be) one of the most rewarding opportunities in your life. There are many advantages, as well as some disadvantages, of business travel – some 4. (of, in, to) which I will outline in this essay.

Travelling for business 5. (is, and, or) often paid by the employer so your expenses are very low. This means you get to stay at nice hotels and are able to eat good meals without worrying 6. (of, about, for) personal costs. It also means that you get to combine work with a bit of sightseeing. Recently, I was able visit Dubai, Doha, and Riyadh on a business trip to the Gulf.

Sometimes travel can 7. (become, belong, because) tiring because after work you do not have the energy to visit places. Added to this, is the fact that, in order to see things, you have to manage your time because you are visiting a place to work first and 8. (none, much, any) free time you have is a bonus.

Overall, business travelling can be tiring and time-consuming, but it is nevertheless a great opportunity to see the world 9. (while, whereas, despite) working in your job. The rewards outweigh the drawbacks, and I would recommend it to anyone who has the opportunity. Seeing the world and working is such a great combination 10. (and, but, with) a real privilege.
