Bear Lake Monster

If you travel to Bear Lake in Utah on a sunny day, you might catch sight of the Bear Lake Monster. People in Utah have been telling stories about this creature (49) _____ the middle of the 19th century. In the stories, the monster is nearly 28-meters long and it looks (50) _____ a huge brown snake. It has ears that stick out from the side of its skinny head and a mouth big (51) _____ to eat a man. According to some people, it has small legs and it moves in a (52) _____ way when it shows up on land. But in the water – watch out! It can swim (53) _____ fast as a horse can run.

Sometimes the monster likes to surprise careless swimmers (54) _____ do not watch out and blows water at them. However, it blows water only on the people it doesn't want (55) _____.

A friend of mine who lives near Bear Lake saw the monster one evening (56) _____ he was walking next to the lake. He immediately (57) _____ shooting at it with his gun. He was a master shooter, but (58) _____ of his bullets[1] touched the monster. It scared him a lot and he ran home (59) _____ than you could say Jack Robinson. He lost his rifle on his way home and later he (60) _____ his wife that the monster had eaten it.

Many people in Utah believe there isn't a monster living in Bear Lake anymore. They think the monster now lives somewhere else. There is an old folk tale about Pecos Bill who once bet[2] some friends in a pub that he could fight the monster. The fighting (61) _____ for three days and created a hurricane around Bear Lake. Finally, Bill threw the monster over (62) _____ shoulder and it flew right over the ocean and landed in Loch Ness, where it lives till now.

Of course, we know the truth. The Bear Lake Monster is still there! Keep your eyes open when it's getting dark and maybe you (63) _____ it come out to feed. Just be careful when swimming in the lake. You might be its next meal!
