People in Asia refer to tropical storms as typhoons. These are the same types of storms as hurricanes. People call tropical storms in the Atlantic Ocean and Eastern Pacific Ocean hurricanes. They call tropical storms in the western Pacific Ocean typhoons. And those storms that occur in the Indian Ocean are cyclones. Yet they are all the same type of storm.

Sadly, tropical storms are often responsible for large numbers of deaths. For instance, the deadliest storm in history took place in Bangladesh. It happened in 1970. Between half a million to one million people perished when a cyclone made landfall. In the 1700s and 1800s, there were several deadly typhoons and cyclones. A few killed several hundred thousand people each. In more recent times, a cyclone that hit Myanmar in 2008 killed at least 100,000 people.
