The following text is for questions number 1-6.

In a bustling city where modernity meets tradition, there lived a young woman named Cinderella. She wasn't your typical fairytale princess, but rather a determined and ambitious entrepreneur with dreams of making it big in the world of fashion.

Cinderella's days were filled with hard work, managing her own small boutique in the heart of the city. Despite the challenges she faced, she never lost her passion for design and creativity. However, her dreams often clashed with the harsh realities of life, as she struggled to make ends meet and compete with larger fashion houses.

One day, an invitation arrived at Cinderella's doorstep. It was for the grand masquerade ball hosted by the city's most influential fashion mogul, Marcus Beaumont. Despite her initial hesitation, Cinderella decided to attend, hoping to network and showcase her designs to potential investors.

At the ball, Cinderella's dazzling mask and elegant gown caught the attention of everyone, including Marcus Beaumont himself. Entranced by her beauty and charm, Marcus approached Cinderella and struck up a conversation. They talked for hours about fashion, creativity, and the challenges of entrepreneurship, discovering a shared passion for innovation.

As the night wore on, Cinderella found herself falling for Marcus, despite knowing their difference in social status. But just as things were looking up, midnight struck, and Cinderella had to flee before her identity was revealed.

In her haste, Cinderella dropped one of her glass slippers, a unique design she had crafted herself. Determined to find the mysterious woman who had captured his heart, Marcus launched a city-wide search, inviting every woman to try on the glass slipper in hopes of finding his true love.

The following text is for questions number 7-15.

Dayang Sumbi, a kind and wise ruler, lived with her son, Sangkuriang, in a fertile valley. One day, a terrible drought gripped the land. Crops withered, and the people grew desperate. Dayang Sumbi consulted the ancient spirits, who revealed a solution: to build a massive boat that would sail the skies and bring rain.

Sangkuriang, known for his strength and determination, volunteered to build the boat. He tirelessly chopped down trees and shaped them into planks. But the task was enormous. Dayang Sumbi, worried about her son, secretly used her magic to speed up the construction. As days turned into weeks, the boat began to take shape, a magnificent vessel unlike anything seen before.

One evening, exhausted from his labor, Sangkuriang fell asleep beside the unfinished boat. Dayang Sumbi, nearing completion with her magic, accidentally cut her finger. A single drop of blood fell onto the unfinished hull, instantly transforming it into a magnificent, glistening boat.

Sangkuriang awoke to the sight of the completed boat. He marveled at its beauty, unaware of his mother's contribution. Proudly, he announced that he would sail the boat to bring rain. Dayang Sumbi, filled with a mix of relief and sorrow, knew she couldn't reveal her part. With a heavy heart, she gave Sangkuriang her magical shawl, a symbol of protection, and watched him sail away.

The boat soared through the heavens, a majestic sight against the clear blue sky. But as it reached its peak, a terrible storm erupted. The boat tossed and turned, battling the wind and rain. Sangkuriang, realizing the danger, desperately called upon the magical shawl. The shawl transformed into a magnificent white bird, guiding the boat through the storm. Finally, the boat reached the clouds, releasing a torrent of rain that poured onto the parched land below.

Sangkuriang, hailed a hero, returned a changed man. He was arrogant, boasting about his feat. Dayang Sumbi, saddened by his transformation, decided to teach him a lesson. She challenged him to a competition: whoever could dig the deepest well in one night would be declared the true savior of the valley. Sangkuriang, confident in his strength, readily agreed.

Under the cloak of darkness, both Sangkuriang and Dayang Sumbi dug with all their might. Sangkuriang used his strength to scoop out massive amounts of earth, while Dayang Sumbi, using her remaining magic, channeled an underground spring. As dawn approached, Sangkuriang had a wide but shallow pit, while Dayang Sumbi had a deep, clear well, brimming with fresh water.

Defeated and humbled, Sangkuriang finally understood the importance of humility and cooperation. He apologized to his mother, acknowledging her role in saving the
