The Jungle Cat Who Wanted to Be a Lion
In a big jungle, there lived a small cat named Kito. Kito loved lions. He thought they were the strongest animals, with their loud roars and big, beautiful manes. "I wish I could be a lion," Kito said every day.

Feeling sad, Kito sat under a tree. A wise old parrot flew down and said, "Kito, you don't need to be a lion to be special. Be the best version of yourself."
Kito didn't understand at first, but that night, something happened. He saw a monkey stuck in a bush, too scared to move. Kito didn't think twice—he jumped in and helped the monkey escape.
The monkey smiled. "Thank you, Kito! You're so brave!"

At that moment, Kito realized something important: being brave didn't mean having a roar or a mane. It meant helping others, even when you feel small. From then on, Kito stopped trying to be a lion. He walked proudly, knowing he didn't need to change who he was.

One morning, Kito tried to roar like a lion. "ROAR!" he shouted, but it came out as a tiny squeak. Next, he made a mane out of leaves and flowers, but the wind blew it away. The other animals laughed at him. "You're just a little jungle cat!" they teased.
