Turning your hobby into a business

Can you imagine earning money from doing something that you really love? That's what Bakhargul Tolegenkyzy does ever since she turned her hobby into a business. We interviewed Lucy Thomas, the author of a new book about Bakhargul's life, to find out more.

Lucy, how did you meet Bakhargul?

I was on holiday in Almaty and I came across her museum. I started talking to her and I realised there was a fascinating story behind her business.

So how did that story start?

Well, when Bakhargul was a young girl, she began collecting gold and silver antiques from her home country, Kazakhstan. Then, in her twenties, she displayed some pieces from her collection in an exhibition. The exhibition was such a success that she travelled all over the country with it, eventually returning to her own museum in Almaty.

Was that the same museum you met her in?

Yes. It's a fascinating place. There are over 1,000 exhibits now that are centuries old, including rugs and clothes, kitchen equipment, ancient weapons and jewellery.

But the museum isn't her only business, is it?

No. In fact, entrance to the museum is free, so Bakhargul doesn't make any money there! She just wants to share the beauty of her country's history with tourists and locals. Her business came after the museum, when she decided she wanted visitors to Kazakhstan to be able to take a piece of the country's culture home with them. That's when she came up with the idea for Ademi-Ai.

What does Ademi-Ai do?

They are a team of designers and artists who create beautiful souvenirs, such as miniatures of famous Kazakh landmarks like the Bayterek Tower, textiles with traditional patterns, and wonderful jewellery. They make all their products from high-quality materials and engrave many of them with Kazakh wishes and expressions. There is no other company like Ademi-Ai in Kazakhstan. They are very successful, and even created official souvenirs for the Asian Winter Games.

So what is Bakhargul's secret to success?

Well, apart from her unique and beautiful products, Bakhargul believes in hard work, patience and determination. She also thinks the support of family and colleagues is essential to building a business.

What do you admire most about her?

Definitely her desire for knowledge. She's wealthy and successful, but she never stops learning.
